

Congenital heart defect is the most common birth defect with high morbidity and mortality. This symposium will highlight the importance of prenatal detection, perinatal management, timed delivery, psychosocial interventions and genetic testing on postnatal outcomes. The outcomes being defined as survival, decreased morbidity and improved neurocognitive, psychological, family preparedness and quality of life through childhood.